Are you interested in photography? In story-telling? In reaching out to students in Moore, Oklahoma? If you answered “yes!” to any of the above, then please keep reading!

Youth Creating Disaster Recovery is an international research project using Photostory with youth to explore disaster recovery. Photostory is a way of telling stories through photos, videos, and spoken words. In this case, Photostory will allow disaster-affected youth in Joplin to help disaster-affected youth in other communities.

We are looking for youth between the ages of 13-22:
- who experienced the Joplin tornado
- who want to create photo-stories to be shared with others
- who can participate in two separate one-day workshops.

During the workshops, participants will have the chance to share ideas about:
- what is important to youth who have experienced disasters
- what is needed to help youth recover
- how to reach out to other youth in disaster-affected communities.

In addition to connecting with other youth, the skills you build and the research experience you gain will be fantastic to list on your resume.

Check out this video featuring a Photostory from one of your peers: http://disaster.colostate.edu/joplin-video.aspx

We would love to connect with you! Please contact Jennifer via text message, Facebook, Twitter, email, or phone (all of her information is on the right).
